Abstract Comprehensive, critical and constructive literature review are very important to produce a good academic dissertation. This article suggests 10 effective steps to write a high-quality literature review for an academic dissertation. The suggested steps are (i) define scope, (ii) conduct comprehensive search, (iii) organize sources, (iv) read and analyze, (v) identify key themes and arguments, (vi) develop logical structure, (vii) write clearly and critically, (viii) provide coherence and synthesis, (ix) revise and refine, and (x) seek feedback. It is recommended for researchers who are working on an academic dissertation to take advantage of this strategy in their writing, in order to produce a high-quality literature review presentation.

Keywords: research methods, literature review, academic dissertation

1. Introduction

Literature review is set as a student task in various modules to enhance understanding of a particular research topic and enable students to practice critically evaluating ideas and arguments (Rewhorn 2017). In academic dissertations for postgraduate students, a well-done literature review is crucial. Students can place their own work into the larger scholarly debate by using it as a thorough review of the body of knowledge and research that already exists on a particular topic. A solid literature review indicates the postgraduate student's topical expertise and comprehension. They can demonstrate your familiarity with important ideas, theories, and empirical investigations while also demonstrating a thorough comprehension of the body of work and theoretical underpinnings of your subject (Hart 2018). By reading and discussing pertinent material, students demonstrate their capacity to critically evaluate and synthesize data, laying the groundwork for their own study.

Postgraduate students can find research gaps and create research questions that add to the body of knowledge by doing an extensive literature review. A proper time-planning strategy is essential for searching the literature to identify the relevant articles and texts that produce higher-quality work (Bolderston 2008). Students can situate their own research within the larger intellectual landscape by reviewing the good literature, which helps them find open issues, unresolved issues, controversies, or areas that need further investigation. To ensure the literature review is accurate, precise, and reliable, the correct steps must be followed and proper actions must be taken where the literature review sets up the research methodology correctly (Snyder 2019). This step is essential to defining the goals and relevance of the dissertation in order to improve added value, particularly when generating a dissertation that adds new knowledge to the topic being examined.

The methodological rigour of the postgraduate student's research is helped by a strong literature review. By analyzing the advantages and disadvantages of earlier research, it will assist students in choosing acceptable research methodologies, measurement equipment, and data gathering strategies (Cooper 2021). A good literature review can extract new ideas from other authors by synthesizing and summarizing previous sources of literature (Bolderston 2008). Students can make educated selections and stay clear of potential hazards in their own studies by critically analyzing the approaches used in prior research.

The literature reviews set the frameworks and provide the context for the research (Rewhorn 2017). The review of the literature lays the groundwork for developing theoretical frameworks in the research for graduate students. Students can develop a solid theoretical framework for their research by using a well-written literature review to help them find and assess the theories, concepts, and models that support their work (Ridley 2012). This is because a literature review is the best way to synthesize research findings to show evidence at the meta-level and to reveal areas that require more research, which is a critical component for developing theoretical frameworks and building concept models (Snyder 2019). Students can defend their research topics and ideas and show how they have contributed to the discipline by drawing on accepted theories.
