Hébert, 1975 Offering an in-depth coverage of economic ideas from ancient times to the present, this outstanding text delivers today's student powerful insight into the broad scope of past intellectual contributions to the evolution of contemporary economic thinking. Notably shying from a mind-numbing encyclopedic listing of isolated people and dusty ideas, the authors provide engaging discourse of both the ideas which have shaped contemporary economic theory and the different methods used for problem-solving. The result is a wonderfully sound and inviting history      Explorations in Economic Methodology Roger E. Backhouse, 2006-10-19 Roger Backhouse is a key figure in the field of economic methodology. Explorations in Economic Methodology both clarifies and responds to the issues raised by the literature and argues that methodology is an essential activity. Offering a constructive but critical response to the recent literature, this collection provides important new insights for students and researchers in economic methodology and the philosophy of science

The Methodology of Economic Model Building (Routledge Revivals) Lawrence A. Boland, 2014-05-01 The major methodological task for modern economists has been to establish the testability of models Too often however methodological assumptions can make a model virtually impossible to test even under ideal conditions yet few theorists have examined the requirements and problems of assuring testability in economics In The Methodology of Economic Model Building first published in 1989 Lawrence Boland presents the results of a research project that spanned more than twenty years He examines how economists have applied the philosophy of Karl Popper relating methodological debates about falsifiability to wider discussions about the truth status of models in natural and social sciences He concludes that model building in economics reflects more the methodological prescriptions of the economist Paul Samuelson than Popper's falsificationism This title will prove invaluable to both students and researchers and represents a substantial contribution to debates about the scientific status of economics

Emmett, 2021-12-02 Volume 39C of Research in the History of Economic Thought and Methodology features a symposium marking the 100th anniversary of the publication of Frank H Knight's Risk Uncertainty and Profit

On Economic Methodology Carl Henning Reschke, 2010 In this paper I try to show how an integrated evolutionary and mainstream economics could be developed At this beginning stage I do not give more than tentative hints but these in a hopefully comprehensive way I try to be comprehensive because I think that it is one of foremost shortcomings of economic reasoning to focus on one issue and stop in front of connections to other issues and fields A combination of these two modes is necessary In my view the focus on separate issues without consideration of linked issues is one of the causes for the proliferation of conflicting economic theories In itself these are right or at least justified they are less useful as explanatory frameworks for real life phenomena They capture only a part of reality and this under specific different conditions which are related to the axioms and assumptions used in model building They say more about the authors ability for rigorous reasoning than about their willingness to provide workable solutions for real problems Empirical research in economics is not free from this problem because theory and models serve as value foundations for deciding which questions to ask and which factors to research The results again influence theoretical exercises When certain factors are not judged important enough to be included in research they cannot influence theory It has maybe by now become clear that this essay aims at sketching a framework for research and theory My aim is consequently not so much to answer one specific question but to show how questions can be framed usefully in economics The idea to give a remedy for the seeming separation between economic theory and reality This is a necessity for a coherent scientific enterprise I begin by discussing categorization as a means to cope with information gathered in the scientific process and stress the dangers which are implied by rigid categories Then I shortly deal with some issues in the history of economic thought The first is the debate on economic methodology at the end of the last century between the so called German Historical school and the mainly Anglo Saxon economists favoring a more analytical treatment The second episode is centered around the development of the theory of firm based on Joan Robinson s work The third episode is connected to the emergence of the Chicago School of economics and the marginalist debate The critical discussion of the emergence of present mainstream concepts leads to a discussion of Knight s distinction between risk and uncertainty This distinction is related to the Popperian solution of the problem of induction falsification as the only acceptable criterion of science Friedman s and Popper s views are then evaluated in the context of more recent positions in the philosophy of science based on evolutionary views This sets the stage for a discussion of the evolutionary nature of the scientific process I finish by evaluating tools available to modern economics
