Violence and Abuse in Intimate Dating Relationships Morven Macnab, 2010 ABSTRACTS Since the issue of dating violence emerged onto the research agenda in the 1980s researchers have focused upon measuring the prevalence of physical violence occurring in young people s intimate relationships using quantitative methods Surveys which have limited young people s reporting to stating whether or not they have perpetrated or sustained any of a fixed range of predetermined violent acts have formed the dominant methodological approach In the main dating violence studies have focused on researching university students in the United States of America and young people not attending American universities are an under researched population in the dating violence literature The dearth of qualitative approaches to past studies of dating violence has meant that young people s own accounts of their experiences attitudes and perceptions of dating violence and abuse have been afforded minimal focus Feminist theoretical approaches to dating violence research are now emerging contributing a valuable gendered analysis of the issues Through qualitative interviews with forty five young people aged 16 21 23 men and 22 women recruited primarily from a Further Education college and an organisation working with young people not in education employment or training this thesis explores young people s attitudes perceptions and experiences of violence and abuse in intimate dating relationships through a feminist theoretical lens The study is couched in a rich body of feminist empirical and theoretical literature which conceptualises intimate partner violence as primarily an issue of men s violence against women perpetrated with the rationale of maintaining power and control The impact that popular theoretical discourses of gender equality and female empowerment may have upon young people s capacity to acknowledge ongoing gender inequalities is also considered in this thesis The findings of the current research indicate that young people s dating relationships and experiences of heterosexuality in general reflect ongoing gender inequalities which are influenced to a great extent by patriarchal modes of power and control The accounts of young men and women in this study established dating relationships as sites of imbalanced gender power with many modes of men s power control surveillance and monitoring of their girlfriends described as normal and acceptable There was a widespread perception among the participants that dating violence is an issue of mutual combat where women are just as likely as men to be perpetrators even though their experiences of dating violence largely reflected the pattern of female victims and male perpetrators In regard to violence against women by men many of the participants perceived men s violence to be understandable in the face of women s provocation particularly in cases where women are perceived to be cheating For a significant minority of young people intimate relationships are sites of violence and abuse with women disproportionately the victims The findings from this study indicate a lack of awareness of the avenues of support that can be accessed by young people experiencing dating violence and abuse The findings also highlight a requirement for direct educative strategies to challenge some young people s support for men s violence against women

Encyclopedia of Domestic Violence Nicky Ali Jackson,2007-12-11 The Encyclopedia of Domestic Violence is a modern reference from the leading international scholars in domestic violence research. This ground-breaking project has created the first ever publication of an encyclopedia of domestic violence. The primary goal of the Encyclopedia is to provide information on a variety of traditional as well as breakthrough issues in this complex phenomenon. The coverage of the Encyclopedia is broad and diverse, encompassing the entire life span from infancy to old age. The entries include the traditional research areas such as battered women, child abuse, and dating violence. However, this Encyclopedia is unique in that it includes many under-studied areas of domestic violence such as ritual abuse, torture within families, domestic violence against women with disabilities, pseudo-family violence, and domestic violence within military families. It is also unique in that it examines cross-cultural perspectives of domestic violence. One of the key special features in this Encyclopedia is the cross-reference section at the end of each entry. This allows the reader the ability to continue their research of a particular topic. This book will be an easy-to-read reference guide on a host of topics which are alphabetically arranged. Precautions have been taken to ensure that the Encyclopedia is not politically slanted; rather, it is hoped that it will serve as a basic guide to better understanding the myriad issues surrounding this labyrinthine topic. Topics covered include: Victims of Domestic Violence, Theoretical Perspectives and Correlates to Domestic Violence, Cross-Cultural Perspectives and Religious Perspectives, Understudied Areas within Domestic Violence Research, Domestic Violence and the Law, and Child Abuse and Elder Abuse.
