The Anyuak definition of what a human person is appears to be a relatively easy one at least in theory because it is based upon purely physical criteria. The metaphysical dimensions of a human being are completely neglected in this definition and are only of importance when needed to exclude a human being from human society. The term person is essential in Anyuak language for it introduces a special category within the large category of human beings: not all human beings are also persons. The notion of personality is in this context of no relevance because it is merely a qualitative extension of the notion of human person: its individual aspect. There is no moral element in the judgement of a human person at least in this theoretical sense and even intelligence which elsewhere is considered to be almost exclusively human is not considered when defining the truly human qualities of a person. Because the individual characteristics of a person, his or her mistakes and problems do not turn into existential questions, Anyuaks hardly ever ask themselves about their real identity or meditate about their inner life. Anyuaks know perfectly well who they are and what place they have in existence and it is with this deep and sober self-knowledge that they face their private destiny. The best as well as the most complete answer to the philosophical question "Who am I" thus is for Anyuak a very easy, self-evident one: "Who I am, I am a human person." Human person means in Anyuak language dhano. Dhano mo dicwo is a male, dhano mo dhago a female person; the plural is jiy or jow, the latter meaning literally "fellows, people." The term dhano is positively discriminating and describes a definite sphere of exclusively human values. A human person is of course a human being, the latter being a particular species living on earth and thus clearly different from animals, birds, or fish. The differentiation from animals is as we shall see of importance because unlike animals, the human being has a spiritual dimension and is conscious of his or her existence. But because of human superiority over animals and because of the usually peaceful coexistence between man and animals on earth, the human being contents himself with stating the differences between man and animals in their physical nature and intellectual capacities; the difference between man and animals is a positive one because it strengthens the position of the human being and is therefore of psychological rather than of truly existential importance to the definition of a human person. Anyuak existence would probably be much less problematic if their universe were simply divided into a spiritual sphere above of God and an earthly sphere of existence below of humans, animals, etc. The problem of human society is aggravated by the fact that the nature of human being is not the same in all people: that there exist treacherous elements which side with the spiritual, nonhuman matters and find tremendous pleasure in torturing and killing other human beings. A human being is therefore not necessarily a human person but can in spite of his or her human appearance very well have supernatural, i.e. inhuman qualities. When Anyuaks define a human person, they primarily think of these categories of existence while the difference to animals and the one to invisible spiritual matters in the sky does not need to be stressed the differentiation between real human persons and people of mainly spiritual nature has to be emphasised and made perfectly clear because it is a differentiation within the same category of earthly appearances the category of human beings The human beings thus are divided into persons and non persons the former defined by purely human values the latter depending upon spiritual attributes If one wonders Who is walking over there anyuaks never give a precise answer such as These are people coming from Ajwara but simply say what in their opinion is the most and the only essential Be jiy di piny These are people of the earth i e earthly not spiritual existences they are normal people This expression shows clearly that a true human person is closely linked to the earth while spiritual non persons of course are rather related to the sphere of the sky to immaterial spirituality To be a human person is the most positive thing an Anyuak can say about her or himself Here there is no idea of humanity as a fault of the humans imperfection and need for salvation on the contrary the human person is the only positive and solid criterion on which all other matters are to be judged The term dhano person thus qualifies or disqualifies somebody as a human being Soemtimes one does hear it in a positive sense as in the already mentioned examples or when for example a difficult discussion is to be put on a constructive level by saying yini dhano thuoo i e you are a human being like me and should therefore not argue as if you were a sorcerer usually however one applies the term to disliked or even hated people by calling them non persons i e pa dhano A man walking naked in a big village like Akobo or Otalo is today considered to be mad at least if he never wears clothes and thus said to be no person any more pa dhano ket and consequently left in peace even by the police In such a context to be a non person is synonymous with to be mad bol when for example my watercarrier in one of his frequent malaria attacks completely lost his mind and even forgot all the obligatory respect due to the king walking with shoes in royal presence and even disregarding the king's orders he was not caught tied up and slashed as normally would have been the case Let him be the king said calmly he is no human person any more i e he does not know what he is doing
