

Valuing Common Stock

- Valuing common shares involves several complications that arise with respect to the appropriate future cash flows that should be discounted.
- One of the most popular discounted cash flow valuation models, uses dividends.
 - However, unlike bonds or even preferred shares, there is no requirement that common shares pay dividends at all.
 - In addition, the level of dividend payments is discretionary, which implies we must make estimates regarding the amount and timing of any dividend payments.
