Understanding And Controlling Crime:

Understanding and Controlling Crime David P. Farrington, Lloyd E. Ohlin, James Q. Wilson, 2012-12-06 In 1982 the John D and Catherine T MacArthur Foundation created a small committee the Justice Program Study Group whose membership is listed at the end of this preface and posed to it what can hardly be regarded as an easy question What ideas what concepts what basic intellectual frameworks are lacking to understand and to more effectively deal with crime in our society Those who are acquainted with the work of the members of the Study Group will appreciate how many divergent views were expressed divergent to the degree that some of us came to the conclusion that we were not a Study Group at all but rather a group being studied an odd collection of ancient experimental animals serving some dark purpose of the Foundation Eventually however a surprisingly strong concurrence emerged We found we were impressed by the extent to which in our discussions we placed heavy reliance on the products of two types of research first those few longitudinal studies related to juvenile delinquency and crime that had been pursued in this country and second a few experimental studies that had sought to measure the consequences of different official interventions in criminal careers These two research strategies had taught us much about crime and its control Other strategies case studies cross sectional surveys participant observations and similar techniques had indeed been productive but it was the longitudinal and experimental designs that firmed up the knowledge that the others helped to discover

Crime Control and Everyday Life in the Victorian City David Churchill, 2017 The history of modern crime control is usually presented as a narrative of how the state wrested control over the governance of crime from the civilian public Most accounts trace the decline of a participatory discretionary culture of crime control in the early modern era and its replacement by a centralized bureaucratic system of responding to offending The formation of the new professional police forces in the nineteenth century is central to this narrative henceforth it is claimed the priorities of criminal justice were to be set by the state as ordinary people lost what authority they had once exercised over dealing with offenders This book challenges this established view and presents a fundamental reinterpretation of changes to crime control in the age of the new police It breaks new ground by providing a highly detailed empirical analysis of everyday crime control in Victorian provincial cities revealing the tremendous activity which ordinary people displayed in responding to crime alongside a rich survey of police organization and policing in practice With unique conceptual clarity it seeks to reorient modern criminal justice history away from its established preoccupation with state systems of policing and punishment and move towards a more nuanced analysis of the governance of crime More widely the book provides a unique and valuable vantage point from which to rethink the role of civil society and the state in modern governance the nature of agency and authority in Victorian England and the historical antecedents of pluralized modes of crime control which characterize contemporary society
